

AM2 Assessment hints and tips

1. The AM2 Self-Assessment Checklist exercise is compulsory: All candidates must provide their assessment centre with a completed copy, signed by themselves and their employer or training provider. This is to confirm that all parties consider the candidate ready to undertake the AM2
2. Use the AM2 Self-Assessment Checklist & 'AM2 Common Errors Guide' as revision tools: The AM2 assessment fully references the electrical installation industry's Level 3 qualification (NVQ Level 3 Diploma and advanced apprenticeship) and the self-assessment checklist is designed to reflect the qualification too. The Common Errors Guide outlines the typical reasons why marks may be lost by candidates for each area of the assessment
3. Act on areas of weakness: If the Checklist highlights any areas of weakness, candidates need to be given the opportunity to develop the required levels of competence before being registered for the assessment (this should minimise the need for re-sits)
4. Get familiar with the literature: Qualified electricians must be familiar with the Building Regulations (and not just Part P) and able to use the BS7671 Wiring Regulations, the On-Site Guide and IET Guidance Note 3 – hence questions on these publications come up in the theory element of the AM2 (Section D)
5. Paperwork! Is the candidate comfortable with completing an IET Electrical Installation Certificate, a Schedule of Inspections and Schedule of test results? And are they able to carry out all these necessary tests?

And finally: The AM2 is designed to assess competence and reasoning: it assesses the levels of understanding and competence to carry out the work and produce effective outcomes, rather than whether a candidate can blindly follow a particular process by rote. Even when following the correct procedures, different people have different ways of arriving at the same, correct outcome
