Your guide to becoming a Domestic Gas Heating Installer

In every home in the UK there is a heating and hot water system with the majority supplied by a gas boiler. In addition to this there are many hundreds of thousands of gas cookers and gas fires.

One thing in common for all these different appliances and systems supplied by gas is that the only people able to work on them are those that are registered with the Gas Safe Register and are suitably qualified and competent to do so, this is demonstrated by holding either an ACS Certificate of Competence or a suitable Level 3 NVQ.

By choosing to become a domestic gas installer you are choosing a trade and career that will always be in demand, and is a gateway to new technologies such as Heat Pumps.

Here at Logic4training we have been training gas engineers since 2002 and have had over 50,000 candidates pass through our doors giving you the confidence that we are name you can trust Logic4training to help you to become a domestic gas heating installer, whatever your experience.

HOW DO I SELECT THE RIGHT COURSE?

A recommendation that will be made by our experienced staff depending on your experience and skills.

For those with minimal or no experience we would recommend the New Entrants route. We would encourage all those interested to attend our introduction session where we will give you all the information on the programme and how it will help you achieve your goal.

For those with at least 2 years' experience gained in the workplace in a related trade (plumber, kitchen fitter or similar) and/or a recognised qualification, we would recommend the Experienced Trades Route. This is subject to the candidate attending the introduction session during which you will undertake an assessment to verify your skills, knowledge and experience (proof will be required).
